

Week 6 Assignment Outline Final Draft

Chamberlain University College of Nursing

COMM277N-16259

Professor Cain

August 14, 2026

Verbal Communication

Specific Topic

Being able to have good verbal communication with confidence in-front of your audience or while presenting in public while making good eye contact and body posture.

Thesis Statement

It's important to have confidence while speaking in public or presenting, I have a few different steps that you should be able to achieve that.

I. Introduction

When speaking in public or presenting, it's natural that we tend to get nervous to the point where it becomes noticeable. Before we present in public, we should practice by gaining confidence, there could be several reasons why we get nervous while speaking in public. Being mindful of our tone, body language, and looks are all important when we are in front of audience because they're paying attention. Therefore if they see that the speaker is confident with what is being said, the audience will be more interested. Communicating verbally with confidence in front of an audience, maintaining strong eye contact and displaying positive body posture while presenting.

II. Body

- A. Practicing before a speech and receiving feedback is the main key to developing a good speech while presenting. Before a speech or presentation it is helpful to gather a small group of people rather it's friends or family and practice in front of them and ask for their feedback. This will help to avoid any confusion while presenting, also the audience will be concentrated on what is being said and not looking getting confused due to the speaker that's stopping to read or think about what they will say next.