Author(s): Dawn Dowding, Jacqueline A Merrill, Nicole Onorato, Yolanda Barron, Robert J Rosati, and David Russell

This article is about a study on the ability of home care nurses to correctly read and interpret different charts, graphs, and tables. The study showed that home care nurses were slightly more literate at reading charts and graphs than the general population. It also broke down the percentage of literacy and numeracy based on the type of graph and the results were promising as well.
