

Reflection on Learning Experience: Socially Responsible Leadership in Nursing

Paragraph One: Envisioning the Use of Learned Concepts in Future Nursing Practice:

I hope to apply the ideas I've learned in this course to improve my capacity to deliver patient-

centered care while keeping an eye on socially responsible leadership in my future nursing career as a baccalaureate-prepared nurse. The significance of incorporating evidence-based practice and ethical decision-making into daily nursing procedures is among the most important principles I have learned. I can make sure that my nursing interventions are not only clinically appropriate and morally sound, but also effective by putting these concepts into practice. For instance, the information I've learned in this course will help me make decisions that put patient safety, justice, and equity first when there are little resources available, such a lack of a particular prescription (Weiss et al., 2019). Furthermore, the training has given me the tools to critically analyze and evaluate myself, which enables me to regularly assess my own work and look for areas for growth. These abilities are vital in the quickly changing healthcare industry.

Paragraph Two: Achieving Program Outcomes Through Course Learning:

In light of the program's objectives, I feel that this course's lessons have helped me most with the one that concerns exhibiting leadership and teamwork with patients and other healthcare professionals (Outcome a). The importance of interprofessional collaboration and teamwork was emphasized frequently throughout the course, which has expanded my knowledge of how to manage and collaborate with varied healthcare teams (American Association of Colleges of Nursing, 2021). Developing my communication skills with patients and coworkers will make me more capable of spearheading programs that support sickness prevention, health promotion, and maintenance.

This result can be attained, for instance, in a clinical setting by working in tandem with social workers, physical therapists, and dietitians to develop all-inclusive care plans that are customized to meet the needs of each patient. Furthermore, learning how to assign tasks effectively has improved my capacity to manage workloads, which in turn has improved overall patient outcomes and promoted a collaborative atmosphere where all team members feel respected and empowered.

Paragraph Three: Achieving AACN Competencies Through Course Learning:

I discovered that the course really assisted me in achieving the competency of developing the capacity for leadership (Competency d), which is one of the skills listed by the American Association of Colleges of Nursing (AACN) Essentials. Many opportunities to investigate various leadership philosophies and the effects of good leadership on team dynamics and patient care were offered by the course. I gained practical experience applying leadership theories to real-world circumstances through group discussions and a variety of case studies. This has been really helpful in giving me the self-assurance and abilities I need to assume
